

The Ale Group for Government

The Ale Group, a Service Disabled Veteran Owned Business, has partnered with JEMS Technology to offer our Veterans access to expert medical care utilizing one of a kind video to smart device technologies.

Innovative technologies are connecting doctors to experts around the globe, instantly and in real time. These innovations, including video to smart device technology, address the significant gap that Veteran patients in rural areas experience compared to their urban peers. By improving access to expert medical care, innovations that can connect physicians to specialists are improving the quality of patient care and the outcomes of that care.

Access to specialty care is a challenge that rural Veterans must tackle daily; according to a the VHA Office of Rural Health about 3.3 million Veterans (about 41% of total) enrolled in the VA Health Care System live in rural or highly rural areas of the country. Men and women Veterans from geographically rural areas make up a disproportionate share of service members and comprise about 39% of the enrolled Veterans who served in Iraq and Afghanistan; many of who are returning to their rural communities.

Video to smart device technology is bridging the gap between physical location and access to expert care. By allowing a doctor to broadcast video over a secure network, a specialty physician can see the Veteran's condition and advise on appropriate care. Since the technology is real-time, diagnoses and recommendations can be made and implemented quickly; this real-time technology can save a Veteran's life in settings where access to immediate expert care is required.

Leveraging the power of innovation can change the outcome of care for rural patients. When access to expertise is critical, the phone in a doctor's pocket might be more important than any other tool in their medical bag.
